Project Title: The Kid LAROI Website

1. Project overview

This site retells the Kid LAROI's story from his Wikipedia article as five designed pages. I want to be informative and tell the story of how a kid from public housing in inner Sydney, recording on his mother's phone, ends up with a number one song on the US Hot 100 while still a teenager. The design should let a visitor feel how far apart those two points are, and how quickly he covered the ground in between.

2. Resources

Copy comes from the Wikipedia article at https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Kid_Laroi. Photography will come from Wikimedia Commons (the 2023 portrait on the article, plus press and event photos), and photos of the places in the story, such as Sydney, Redfern and Broken Hill. The official site (thekidlaroi.com) is useful for reference only.

3. Pages

- Home – who he is, quick facts, links into the site
- Story – Waterloo, Broken Hill, Adelaide, Redfern; the name "Laroi"; the early hustle
- Career timeline – 2017 to 2026, one entry per milestone
- Music – projects, key songs, collaborators, tours
- Beyond the music – acting, brands, giving back, style
- Sources – Wikipedia and image credits

4. Audience

The site is for people who know the name or the song but not the story - fans in their teens and twenties, and anyone who stumbles onto it. Most visitors will arrive on a phone, so the mobile layout is the primary one.

5. Message

The point I want visitors to leave with is that he was not handed this. As a young teenager he was uploading music to SoundCloud, hanging around hotels to meet artists he admired, and working in a fruit shop to help his family. His success is real hard work and talent from someone who came from very little, and it also carries his Kamilaroi heritage and his pride in Australia.

The site should tell that story first and treat the chart records as proof rather than the headline.

6. Tone

Honest, direct and warm. I want it to sound like a good music documentary rather than a fan page, so no hype language and no focus on relationships or drama. Specific facts (places, ages, dates) over adjectives. Where he is quoted, the quote should be short and let him speak for himself.

7. Visual style

My direction is a mixtape that grew up. It starts from the DIY side of his story (SoundCloud uploads, cassette inserts, gig posters, zines) and something clean enough to read comfortably on a phone. I picture a dark base with large condensed headlines and one hot accent color. Type does most of the work, set big and a little tight, with generous empty space around it. Photos should be treated the same way (black and white or a single duotone) so that photos of very different quality still feel like one set. A thin handwritten-style note can appear occasionally for personal moments.
